Hey,

It's me. You just hung up the phone, and I said I'd leave a voicemail, and I ran out of the classroom, and I can see you in the classroom right now. There you are, looking at me. Um, I'm walking around. Uh, I went back into the backroom at this point. Um, I'm in a really good mood today, if you haven't noticed, but I'm smiling a lot more than usual. Uh, this. I don't know what to do. Now. And we left—we left the monopoly thing out. I'm going to have to put that up. Now. Um, I don't know if I can leave long messages. Hehe.

M'kay,

Bye.

Everything is fine, but

Mimi is in the ER due to continued shortness of breath. She rode the ambulance, and, um, they gave Mimi her medicine on the way here, and she was already so much better when we arrived, and her ER doctor is Dr. Vaddavalli. All is well. She's in excellent hands. I'm at the hospital if anyone wants to call for the purpose of talking to Mimi.

Call my phone.

She would love that.
