- Chinwendu – OEOC
 - How does staff senate get involved in the formal process of the grievance?
 - Individual staff members have an opportunity to handle any sort of grievances informally first but if not resolved, then individual staff can invoke the formal grievance process before it gets to the grievance hearing. The staff senate gets involved then the grievant is given an opportunity to write their statement. It goes to the respondent and they have an opportunity to respond. If the grievant agrees to the respondent, then that's it for the formal process. The grievant has five days to submit. Then from there it climbs the chain of command of the respondent. If the complaint is still not approved by grievant then the staff senate will get involved. 5 members will be appointed from the senate to form a grievance committee ensuring no conflict of interest on either party.
 - Hearing process has three parts
 - Opening statement where each party has the opportunity to present their case
 - Additional witnesses
 - Closing remarks
