PROGRAM NOTES

La Pointe au Portail tells a story of The Grand Portal (la pointe au portail) is a natural arch rock formation on the shore of Lake Superior within the great escarpment of the Pictured Rocks National Lake-shore. Before 1900, its span of over 100 feet was large enough to allow ships to sail underneath it. A mighty crash in 1900, which could be heard 100 miles away, limited the scope of the natural arch, but the formation maintains its grandeur. The music of this trio portrays the effects of wind and waves upon the Grand Portal, including a musical representation of a geological collapse.

Deserted Paths was commissioned by the Green Lake Trio, and was premiered at the 2014 National Flute Convention in Chicago. Each of the three movements represents hiking on a deserted path to different destinations. The first movement, entitled "...to the hayfield," opens with an extended flute solo. The second, "...to the mountains," features the oboe, while the finale, "...to the old cemetery," opens with just piano but soon continues with all three instruments on the path.

Mantra employs a repeating four note rising figure that permeates the entire piece. Thus the 'mantra' in this case is a primal sound, that serves as a building block to all that follows, melodically and harmonically. Spatial notation is utilized throughout, with some improvisatory passages included. The final result should be a peaceful stasis that evolves gradually into a sequence of emotional outbursts but that then subsides into an altered version of the opening mantra - a return to contentment with just a tinge of regret.

Rhapsodies and Interludes was commissioned by Lia Uribe. Composed in 2012, this trio for flute, oboe and bassoon incorporates a continuously evolving dreamlike figure that alternates with contrasting interludes. The three instruments provide a variety of textures: monophonic, homophonic and polyphonic, often morphing from one to another in rapid succession. At first, the contrasts between ideas are stark, but eventually the rhapsodies and the interludes merge into one idea, with the opening three note motive (C#, B, D) never far away.

ROBERT K. MUELLER ARTIST STATEMENT

I endeavor my music to be the expression of human emotion, from excitement to ecstasy, from sadness to shame, from joy to rejection, and a myriad of other feelings that are part of our human experience.

Writing almost exclusively in acoustic media, I am energized by the countless possibilities of structural, harmonic, melodic, timbral, and rhythmic sounds that can be utilized to reveal sentiments and passions (without pandering to the basest of emotions), but always with an ear to satisfying logical development and conclusion. Works that I have created for public performance include large orchestral or wind ensemble pieces, chamber music, and works for solo instruments.

It is my hope that the performers and listeners will connect with my music in a visceral way. Do they hear a melody and identify with its haunting quality? Does a chord progression "strike a chord" within their own hearts? Does a certain orchestration evince a particular mood? The great poet William Wordsworth said, "Fill your paper with the breathings of your heart." I strive through my music to communicate the essence of human expression, from the breathings of my own heart to those of the listener.
