Abstract

This thesis documents and explores the actor’s approach to and discovery of the values, methods and motivations of Sir Toby Belch in the Fall 2015 University Theatre production of William Shakespeare’s “Twelfth Night.” In addition, the author’s second thesis role was as Andrew Makepeace Ladd III in A. R. Gurney’s, “Love Letters” produced and performed in Kimpel Hall Studio during Spring 2016. The thesis also includes a personal statement of artistry, programs for the thesis related performances, a headshot, resume, production photos and a link to the actor’s website.

We have laughed together, cried together, worked together, loved together, accomplished together and grown together these past three years in ways that I would never have felt was possible.

Finally, I wish to thank and express my deepest love and gratitude to my family: Mildred Rogers, Katie Rogers, Spencer Rogers and Josh Rogers for always supporting this passion that often came at a cost for them. Thank you for blessing me with your love and for allowing me to travel on this journey of self-discovery.
Dedication

This thesis is dedicated to Mildred Rogers for her love, kindness, encouragement, patience and belief in me that knows no bounds. Without her steadfast courage, enthusiasm and support in undertaking this new direction, I would not be here today. I love you, Mildred. You inspire me to be a better person each and every day.

Personal Statement of Artistry

Some time ago, I wrote the following personal mission statement: “To experience joy onstage and off.” To me, each of us is a performer - regardless of our station in life. Whether in a theatre, a classroom or the workplace, each of us performs in some capacity every day. In “As You Like It,” William Shakespeare eloquently instructs us that “All the world’s a stage, and all the men and women merely players; they have their exits and their entrances, and one man in his time plays many parts.”

During my three years of study in the Master of Fine Arts program at the University of Arkansas Department of Theatre, this mission statement has likewise become my statement of artistry. In every role that I explore and undertake, I look for the joy or the absence of joy that resides in each character and hence I can discover the truth of that character. When I am successful in finding and living the truth and values of each character, I am then able to better understand what it means to be a human; what it means to live in another’s circumstances and; how to better understand and accept the struggles of my fellow brothers and sisters. Through that understanding and acceptance, I am able to experience the joy of discovery, of performance and, ultimately, of life.
Lovable Rogue: The Shenanigans of Sir Toby Belch

The process for discovering the “lovable rogue” that is Sir Toby began soon after “Twelfth Night” casting with a general cast email from director Jenny McKnight. The email outlined McKnight’s overall concept and vision for the production. This “Twelfth Night” was going to be unique and exciting. What set this production apart was its locale: New Orleans around the turn of the twentieth century during the early days of jazz and the height of the infamous Storyville District, a city zone where prostitution and other illicit activities were legalized and regulated by the city of New Orleans between 1897 and 1917.

The locale served to illuminate the two major themes to be explored in this production: the theme of “Restoring Balance” where, as McKnight explained, a “world of opposites and extremes…seesaws back and forth until the end where the world becomes balanced and each person finds his/her apt partner, his/her best way forward, or his/her just reward” and the theme of moving from “darkness…to light.” The household of Orsino was located in the French Quarter representing revelry, openness and light while the household of Olivia was set in the more stately, refined area of the Garden District representing mourning, restrictiveness and darkness. The overall set, light, costume and sound design greatly enhanced this central image.

In the email, McKnight encouraged the cast to research and discover the rich heritage found in New Orleans, most notably, the diverse multicultural complexion, the musical legacy, the religious traditions, the Carnival and party atmosphere and the notorious history that defines the city. We were urged to listen to the music of New Orleans, to read books and watch movies of the city and the era of which this production would be set.

Shortly after receiving McKnight’s email, I stumbled across Ken Burns’ “Jazz,” an acclaimed documentary chronicling and celebrating the birth and development of the Jazz phenomenon. The very first episode, titled simply “Gumbo,” focused on the time frame in which our “Twelfth Night” production would be set. The documentary’s photographs, film clips and interviews as well as the other historical information from Ms. McKnight provided a wealth of information from which to further develop, define and discover the shenanigans and pleasure-seeking values that Shakespeare had birthed in Sir Toby Belch some 500 years earlier.

To truly discover the lovable rogue required extensive study and research with the text itself. The text always provides clues. These clues can be quite clear and they can be hidden or implied. By digging into the text, consulting reference materials, having individual and group conversations with the director and actors, and making discoveries in rehearsal, one can find important clues to what the story and the character is all about. All of these elements provided key contributions to a better understanding of Sir Toby, not just who he is as a character, but who he is as a human being.

We as a cast were fortunate to have McKnight as a director. Not only did she provide tremendous insight and experience into the world of Shakespeare, she provided members of the cast with the added benefit of several text rehearsals with Grant Goodman, an excellent and experienced Shakespearean actor (and McKnight’s spouse). The time spent in text study and conversations with Goodman and McKnight proved invaluable and opened my eyes to the world of Illyria/New Orleans and Sir Toby Belch.

An example of one of the discoveries made during study sessions with Goodman was that Sir Toby, as Olivia’s uncle, should be assuming patriarchal responsibilities; but, his choosing of irresponsible behavior instead, could be a result of the fear that his life may soon be over like that of his brother and nephew. This leads him to grab lustily at whatever time he has left, to live his life as fully and with as much fun as possible. Sir Toby’s super-objective can be summed up simply as “party hardy!”

However, there is a problem: money. In order to live life fully, one must have money, or so Sir Toby thinks. For whatever reason, Sir Toby appears to need money. We infer that Sir Toby has old money; money that could be tied up for some reason such as “land rich, cash poor.” Enter Sir Andrew Aguecheek with a solution: access to a sizable amount of money. If Sir Toby can make a match between Olivia and Sir Andrew, thus making Sir Andrew a kinsman, all of Sir Toby’s problems will be solved and he can live the remainder of his life happy and carefree.

Toby has another problem: Sir Andrew is a complete fool and everyone, including Toby, knows it. While Toby’s knowledge of this allows him to easily manipulate Andrew, it also presents him with obstacles in how to make Sir Andrew a presentable and suitable match with Olivia. Working around and in spite of these obstacles leads him to a number of roguish shenanigans, many of which blow up in his face but leads to a sort of redemption ultimately.

In addition to spending and drinking much of Sir Andrew’s money, there are numerous other shenanigans involving Sir Toby Belch. They include hatching the revenge plot in Act II, Scene 3 with Maria, Feste, Fabian and Andrew to make Malvolio believe that Olivia is in love with him; the actual gulling scene in Act II, Scene 5 where Malvolio finds the “love letter” written by Maria in likeness of Olivia’s handwriting; urging Sir Andrew to challenge Cesario to a duel in order to win Olivia’s affection in Act III, Scene 2 culminating in the actual fight in Act III, Scene 4; “exorcising the demon” from Malvolio in Act III, Scene 4 and having Malvolio locked away as being crazy and possessed; fighting Sebastian in Act IV, Scene 1 resulting in Olivia’s rebuke and leading to Sir Toby in Act IV, Scene 2 expressing his desire to have Malvolio released. However, Toby has one last run-in with Sebastian offstage prior to his final entrance in Act V, Scene 1. This results in a “bloody coxcomb.” Sir Toby ultimately marries Maria, curtails his drinking and it is assumed that he takes his rightful patriarchal responsibilities seriously.

Another key discovery that I made with McKnight and Goodman’s assistance was that, despite Sir Toby’s unconscionable behavior, trickery and manipulation of Sir Andrew, he truly likes the young man and enjoys spending time with him. Andrew gives Toby vitality and makes him feel young again.

This discovery led me, again with McKnight and Goodman’s help, to approach the very last encounter with Sir Andrew somewhat differently than other productions. In Act V, Scene 1, when Toby enters limping and bandaged after a fight with Sebastian, Sir Andrew offers to help Sir Toby in receiving medical attention. Some past productions have shown Sir Toby to dismiss Sir Andrew cruelly, calling him an “ass-head and a coxcomb and a knave; a thin-faced knave, a gull.” Instead of dismissing and ridiculing Andrew, I took the action and tactic of asking for Andrew’s help and accepting it in spite of my own behavior as the aforementioned “ass-head.” It is my belief that this served to redeem Sir Toby and to give him a better and more positive character arc.

The rehearsal process was invaluable in discovering the fun and the humanity of Sir Toby Belch. Exploring and playing with the other actors brought Sir Toby to life for me. The direction, understanding, encouragement and freedom that McKnight gave us to try new things, new approaches, and just plain “play” provided each of us the opportunity to truly discover our characters and the relationships between each one.

Sir Toby has a number of values, good and questionable, that drive his behavior and character. They include a love and zest for life; his love for money and status; his love of drinking and eating; his love of women and good parties; his love for his niece; his love and admiration of Maria; his love of mischief and practical jokes; his love of song; his fear of death; his fear of time slipping away; his love for his friends; his dislike and disrespect of Malvolio; his quest for a good time even if it hurts others; his fear of commitment; his fear and/or avoidance of taking responsibility; his expectation of others to do their duty regardless that Sir Toby himself may do otherwise; and other values that lead to his many shenanigans and that help shape the lovable rogue that we have come to know and love as Sir Toby Belch.

It was a distinct pleasure and privilege to play Sir Toby and I feel very fortunate to have had the opportunity to meet him, discover him and, yes, love him. While I know there are still many layers to uncover and discover in Sir Toby, I can only hope that I brought him alive in some small way to do his character and Mr. Shakespeare justice.

MEET THE CAST

Welcome to the second production of our 2015–16 Mainstage Season. I am certain you will enjoy seeing faculty director Jenny McKnight’s rendition of William Shakespeare’s Twelfth Night set not in Illyria, but in New Orleans during Mardi Gras at the beginning of the 20th Century. I know you’ve all had a wonderful time working on this classic piece and are eager to share it with you.

I am often asked, “How do you pick your season of shows for the University Theatre?” The short answer is this: it’s not easy! When the faculty begins the process of selecting a season for the University Theatre stage, many, many factors must be considered; however, as an exercise in theatre, I will only discuss two: First and foremost, the students who make up the Department of Theatre are our primary concern. As educators, we work to identify just the right pieces that will challenge and inspire our students to become the best theatre artists they can as they develop their skills as designers, actors, technicians, directors, and playwrights. The student’s best interests are front and center as we make our way through hundreds of scripts each year in search of the “right” plays and musicals. It’s no easy task, but one the faculty takes very seriously.

Second and equally important are you, the audience. We understand there are many theatre options in the Northwest Arkansas community, and we work very hard to stand out amongst a very exciting crowd. I’m sure we can all agree that live theatre first and foremost should be entertaining. Attending live theatre is a wonderful way to set aside the rigors of daily life, which tends to be filled with business meetings, household chores, paying bills, and other practices. These activities monopolize our day and the idea of spending a couple of hours in a darkened theatre (with a couple hundred of our closest friends) watching live entertainment is an excellent respite from all of those stresses.

However, we also believe that it is our obligation to provide an opportunity for audiences to be challenged; to be provoked; to be inspired; and, ultimately, to be changed. We hope that by seeing our productions – created by the next generation of world leaders in the arts and beyond – you are moved to engage in a dialogue about the world in which we live, and perhaps, even more importantly, the world we will leave to those who come after us. Some of our productions this year will push that envelope in what we believe to be a very healthy and appropriate way.

This year’s season is an exciting collection of works written by such artists as Noel Coward, William Shakespeare, Sarah Ruhl and Billie Joe Armstrong & Michael Mayer. It is safe to say that most of our audience members will know one or perhaps some, but most likely not all of these authors. What is also safe to say is that each show this season will entertain, challenge, and delight audience members of all ages, interests and backgrounds. There is truly something for everyone.

Thank you for your patronage and hope to see you at the theatre!

DIRECTOR’S NOTES
When producing a play by William Shakespeare, many directors choose to set the play in a more contemporary time and place than the playwright intended, to illuminate the themes, relationships and spirit of the play to a modern audience. I’ve chosen New Orleans: a vibrant waterfront city, prone to storms, with a rich cultural heritage and adventurous, fun-loving, passionate and resilient people.

During the early years of the 20th century, folks of all ethnic and cultural backgrounds lived together in what Jazz musician and New Orleans historian Winton Marsalis calls not a “melting pot,” but a “gumbo.” At that time, Jazz was beginning to emerge as a musical form in its own right, improvised from origins in blues and ragtime. And the social structure of those in power and those who served them was extremely important. Not to mention New Orleans carnivals, the history of legal prostitution in Storyville, gambling, Jazz funerals, the French Quarter, The Garden District, mariners, pirates...

As we rehearsed the play and honed our design ideas, we uncovered even more parallels between 1900s New Orleans and Shakespeare’s Illyria.

Thanks for joining us – we hope you’ll enjoy the trip as much as we have!
- Jenny McKnight

GETTING TO KNOW...
Kiah Kayser, Scenic & Projection Designer

Who is Kiah Kayser?
I am a second-year MFA scenic design candidate from a tiny town in Minnesota that my friends enjoy calling “south Canada.” I love hanging out with the grad family here in Arkansas and shamelessly watching How to Get Away with Murder. Also I would like to extend the biggest shout out and gratitude towards the grad/shop family. They are truly some of the most supportive people I know.

How did you get interested in design?
I grew up doing community theatre with my family and building sets with my dad. That’s where that theatre bug first really bit. What really got me interested in design was taking a theatre practicum class in my undergrad at Iowa State University. I got to paint every so often and I showed interest in it, so they hired me to work in the scene shop the next year. I kept painting and then people wanted me to design. I fell in love with the idea of having to create an exciting world for the actors to work in while still supporting the story.

What do you wish people knew/understood about scenic design?
I wish people knew that putting on a show takes an insane amount of people working together. There are so many people that work on each show that have a stake in it. They all have to make decisions while keeping in mind the other people they are working with and also trying to stay true to how they want to tell the story. It’s insane, but very wonderful and rewarding at the same time because there is such a sense of achievement when it all comes together.

If you could design any show, what would it be and why?
If I could design any show, I would love to do Macbeth. I am a big fan of Shakespeare and being able to deal with the magic and turn of it on Macbeth would be quite fun. I would also really love to do Guys and Dolls because I have never done a musical before and that show is so fun and has this nice classic sense to it.

What do you plan to do after you receive your MFA?
After graduate I plan on working as a freelance painter/designer for a while and then hopefully teaching.

If you were not in theatre, what would you want to do?
If I were not in theatre, I would love to at least be teaching. Seeing others discover things and really let those things “click” is a fascinating process. Seeing the lab students work and learn in the theatre has brought me such joy. Their energy and passion reminds me constantly of why I wanted to do theatre in the first place.

GETTING TO KNOW...

Jenny McKnight, Director

Who is Jenny McKnight?
I'm a director, actor, teacher, wife, daughter, sister, sports fan, introvert, pescatarian, avid reader, seeker of balance in all things. Not necessarily in that order.

What made you decide to join the faculty here at the University of Arkansas?
I really like the emphasis on collaboration, teamwork, and respect for each individual's contributions in the approach to classes and productions here at UA. That isn't always part of every educational environment, but it fuels our Theatre Department.

What is your favorite thing about this production?
Collaborating with the amazing students who are involved, and watching them create a team that's dedicated to honest, clear, innovative storytelling—it's been a joy.

Do you prefer acting or directing? Why?
That's like asking a parent to choose their favorite child! I love them both equally, in different ways. I'm grateful for this opportunity to develop my directing skills and further explore the ways in which my acting experiences inform my directing approaches... and vice versa.

If you could play any role in the world, what would it be?
A Tennessee Williams heroine: Alma Wyemiller, Hannah Jokes, Blanche DuBois...

If you could direct any show, what would it be and why?
A Harold Pinter play: Old Times, The Birthday Party, Betrayal...

If you could tell the audience one thing before they see this show, what would it be?
I'd thank each of them for investing the next few hours in a real-time, ephemeral, shared experience. I'd invite them to leave the outside world for a while and fully immerse themselves in the world of Shakespeare's (and their own) imagination.

THE STORY OF TWELFTH NIGHT, OR WHAT YOU WILL

Orsino, the Duke of Illyria, is in love with the Countess Olivia. She is in mourning for the death of her brother, so she rejects Orsino’s suit. Another young woman, Viola, has just survived a shipwreck and washes up on Illyria’s shore, fearing that her twin brother has died in the storm at sea. Viola decides to dress as a boy to get work as an attendant to Duke Orsino. Orsino sends his new servant “Cesario” (Viola in disguise as a boy) to woo Olivia on his behalf. Viola goes unwillingly, as she has already fallen in love with Orsino. Olivia is attracted to “Cesario” and she sends her butler, Malvolio, after “him” with the gift of a ring.

Olivia’s uncle, Sir Toby Belch, her servant Maria, and Sir Toby’s wealthy but gullible friend, Sir Andrew Aguecheek (who is also hoping to woo Olivia) all plot to expose the self-righteous, sanctimonious Malvolio. Maria forgives a letter that tricks Malvolio into thinking that his mistress Olivia loves him. Malvolio appears dressed ridiculously, smiling and behaving strangely as he was told to in the letter. Unaware of the trick, Olivia is horrified and has Malvolio imprisoned as a madman.

Meanwhile Viola’s twin brother, Sebastian, having survived the shipwreck, comes to Illyria accompanied by his rescuer Antonio, who is a wanted man in Illyria. Sir Andrew challenges Sebastian to a duel (thinking he is “Cesario”) and Olivia elopes with Sebastian (thinking he is “Cesario”).

Finally, the twins encounter each other, astonishing everyone in town. “Cesario” reveals that “he” is actually Viola, and she and Sebastian celebrate their reunion. The play ends as Orsino welcomes Olivia and Sebastian. Then, acknowledging his own attraction to Cesario, he promises that once she is dressed as a woman again they, too, will be married. Feste sings a final song to conclude the play’s action, and invites the audience to celebrate the restoration of balance to the world of the play.

I apologize for my delayed response!

Yes, I am happy to grant permission for you to use the attached photo taken in 2012 for any and all usage. You may use the photo in any personal or commercial intention as you see fit. I take no authority or ownership of the photo.

When I took that 20 or so headshot sessions back in 2012, I told everyone they could use the photos in any way they want and never have to worry about rights, grants, permissions, or credit. As an actor, sometimes you need full rights to a good set of editorial shots and a good few minutes of portfolio footage. It comes in handy! Happy to donate 😊

Also, I adore you. 😍

Hi Jennica! I hope this finds you, Ryan and Foe doing well. I wanted to ask if you would mind granting me permission to use the attached headshot you took of me a few years ago. I'm finishing up my M.F.A. in Acting at the University of Arkansas this spring and one of the requirements is to include a professional headshot in my thesis documentation. I just need written approval from you. You can simply respond to this email and I can include that in my permissions section. Thanks so much for your consideration. I receive so many positive comments on the headshot and I'm grateful to you for doing such a great job with it! Take care and thanks again for your friendship and for all you and Ryan are doing through Purpose Pictures! Best always, Bill
