Abstract

In this thesis I will be discussing my process as an actor when approaching a role, specifically the role of Macduff in William Shakespeare’s, Macbeth. I will include a character/script/event analysis as well as a journal of my experiences during the rehearsal process. I will also include production photos, programs, a link to my website, and my headshot and resume at the end.

I. Statement of Artistry

A wise woman once told me that the reason we do theatre is to lessen the distance between human beings. When I first started in this program I thought that was a powerful creed to live by, so I decided to find a way to make it my own. Throughout my time here I have learned how to make meaningful, authentic connections with people on stage that allow an audience to have an empathetic experience and hopefully learn something about themselves or the human condition in general before they leave the theatre.

I believe that it is the actor’s job to give a voice to character that comments or reflects on what it means to be a human placed in the circumstances that a playwright has given in order to connect with audience members for the purpose of healing, educating, or simply entertaining. An actor must be prepared to dive into the human condition in order to present an authentic character truthfully, and repeatedly. The skills and tools that I have learned during my time at the University of Arkansas will continue to nurture my work in the future and expand my craft as an actor.

II. Introduction

In the first semester of this program we are enrolled in our first Acting Studio class. Here we learn what the actor’s job is when approaching a new role. The process begins with reading the script. I try to read the script for the first time without any bias. I do not like to think about the characters or any acting work at this point in the process. It is simply a first impression read of the script.

Next, I have to analyze the character that I’m going to play. To do this, I have to extract the information in the script that is pertinent to the character. This includes things that the character says about their self, things that other characters say about them, and things that they do in the script that help indicate what their values are, which I will be discussing later in this thesis. Once I’ve discovered these attributes about the character I have to find ways to connect with them and make it personal for me. Then I look at the things they say and do in the script and find justifications for everything. I have to find out why they do the things they do and what they are trying to gain from it.

The final step in the process happens when the actor gets into the rehearsal room. This is where the choices I have made after reading the script will come into play. I present who I think this character is and how they would react in the world of the play and in relationship to all of the other characters/given circumstances. If I have done my homework I will be able to live authentically through the story and achieve what the director has envisioned. At this point the director can tweak whatever it is that they need fixed, and I would make the adjustments. Once the director is satisfied with the choices I have made I can lock them in and make them performance-ready.

III. Script Analysis

It’s hard to justify why Macbeth does the things that he does, but upon analyzing the script we came to the conclusion that there had to be an event that sparked the catalyst for the rest of the play. Macbeth normally starts with a scene between the three Weird Sisters. They introduce the eerie world of the play and inform the audience that something with the balance of nature is thrown off. Our director decided to add a scene before this in order to justify the horrible actions that Macbeth uses throughout the play. This scene was a ceremony for the funeral of Macbeth’s only child. Macbeth is forced to go to war immediately after this event. It was the director’s hope that this event would spark the motivation that the protagonist needed to carry out his plans.
It’s quickly revealed at the top of the show that the war has ended and Macbeth is revered as a hero. Before he finds this out he is confronted by the Weird Sisters who prophesize that he will become the Thane of Cawdor and also King of Scotland. Before he has time to contemplate what this means he is approached by his comrades, Ross and Angus, who inform him that he has indeed been awarded the title of Thane of Cawdor. Macbeth decides to write a letter home to his wife about all of the things he’s just been told. Lady Macbeth, also still grieving from the death of her child, choses to jump on this opportunity to seize the position of the throne in order to deal with the pain that she’s feeling.

When Macbeth returns home and confronts his wife it becomes clear that he is afraid of not living up to the manhood expected of him, especially after losing their only child. Lady Macbeth takes advantage of this vulnerability and convinces him that the only way to be a real man is to kill the king and steal the crown. While, Macbeth is hesitant to betray someone that he has always held dear to him, he is willing to do anything to be seen as a man in the eyes of his wife.

Macbeth’s fear does not go away after the murder of King Duncan. Part of the Weird Sister’s prophecy was still unfulfilled; the part about Banquo’s descendants becoming heir to the throne. Macbeth decides to murder his best friend because of this, for fear of someone stealing the power that he has obtained. Unfortunately, he does not succeed in eliminating all of Banquo’s familial line.

The last part of the prophecy is one of Macbeth’s main sources of fear. He is told to beware of Macduff. Once he finds out that Macduff has fled to England to find the king’s son, Malcom, and get an army together, he sends someone to murder Macduff’s entire family, not knowing that this would be the motivation for Macduff to hunt him down and get revenge. This is the point in the play where Macbeth is climbing to the peak of his paranoia. He realizes that things might not work out for him when he hears that Malcom and Macduff have brought an army back from England, but he is determined to hold his position.

Ultimately, Macbeth’s fear led to his downfall. The fear that he would never live up to the reputation of the man he was supposed to be overpowered any kind of morality that he had. After he got everything he wanted he was still paranoid about losing it all which led to him making choices that came back to haunt him in the end.

IV. Character Analysis

Macduff is a difficult character to play because he does not appear much in the script. In Shakespeare’s original script he first appears in Act I, Scene 6 when the King and his soldiers arrive at Macbeth’s home to celebrate their victory and Macbeth’s triumphs. He then returns in Act II, Scene 3 to discover the king’s body and Act II, Scene 4 to alert his cousin Ross that something strange is taking place and that he would be leaving for England immediately. Macduff does not return to the play until Act IV, Scene 3.

Our director was exceedingly generous in helping me develop this character. He made it a choice to cast Macduff as the Bloody Captain in Act I, Scene 2. This means that I would have been fighting alongside of Macbeth during the battle with Macdonwald and the king of Norway. It also means that I helped save Malcom from captivity. We decided early on that I would have been close friends with Macbeth before the action of the play takes place, and that I was likely someone that the king trusted enough with his life because I was the one he asked to transport him from Macbeth’s home the morning that he was found murdered. These relationships helped me connect with what Macduff would have been going through after he discovered Duncan’s body.
He was heartbroken, angry, and suspicious. How could something like this happen in a place that was supposed to be secure? And who could have done it?

After everyone at Macbeth’s home his alerted that the king has been murdered a meeting is called to figure out how to proceed. The audience does not get to see what transpires at this meeting, but immediately afterward is when Macduff makes the decision to leave for England. I made the choice that there was something that happened during that meeting that caused me to become suspicious of Macbeth. I didn’t get the answers that I needed in the meeting, so I decided to take matters into my own hands and find Malcom on my own.

From the time between Macduff leaving Scotland in Act II, Scene 4 and having his conversation with Malcom in Act IV, Scene 3 Macbeth has ruled as king for a while. During this time he has been murdering people whom he thinks do not stand loyal to him, and noble men have been fleeing the country. Since the script does not say exactly what kinds of things Macbeth does to warrant him a tyrant, I asked the director what this would be like. He told me to think about our current political situation and America and that he imagined it was not dissimilar. This provided a great source for my need with Malcom in Act IV, Scene 3. The other major source was connected to Macduff’s values about his family. I chose to make that value just as strong, if not stronger, than his love for his country/disdain for Macbeth. This is why he needed Malcom to join him and help defeat the tyrant, so he could make sure that his family would be safe. Then, when he finds out that he is too late and his whole family has been murdered, it crushes him. The guilt for leaving them alone combined with his need for revenge drives him to the action of taking Macbeth’s life at the end of the play.

Macbeth and Macduff are set up as an antithesis in the play. This is what sparked my inspiration for the title of this thesis, “What It Means to Be a Man.” Being a man is all about the choices you make. Macbeth thinks he is doing the masculine thing by taking another man’s life to gain power and then destroying anyone who might be a threat to that power. The choices he makes define him as someone who is heartless, cruel, and treacherous even if he made them to deal with a great loss in his life. The choices that Macduff makes come from a place of love and protection for his country and his family. The choice to take Macbeth’s life comes from that place. His heart always chooses to do the right thing, and that is what being a man is all about.

V. Event Analysis

During my time in this program I have been taught a style of analysis to help guide my way through the action of the play. This technique is called Event Analysis. There are three events to pay attention to when analyzing a script; Initial Event, Central Event, and Main Event. These three events exist for the entire play and also every scene.

The Initial Event is the last thing on the timeline before the start of the play that every character is alive with. As previously stated, it was the director’s choice to change the beginning of the show which means that the initial event for your production had to be adjusted. Originally, the Initial Event is that Macbeth has been away at war proving that himself a hero. For our production the funeral scene for Macbeth’s child predated this event which means that his son dying had become the new Initial Event.

The Central Event is the point in the show that the reader/audience knows which force is going to win. It usually happens toward the very end of the play and is only followed by the Main Event. The Central Event in the script of Macbeth is the moment Macbeth is discovered murdered. The Central Event for our production was placed in the same place in the script, but the motivation for the event was different. The actor playing Macbeth along with the director chose to bring the ghosts of all the people Macbeth has murdered back during the fight between him and Macduff, which forces Macbeth to realize what he has done by committing these murders and allows him to make the decision to take his own life by falling on Macduff’s sword.

The Main Event where we see how everyone is going to live in response to the Central Event. The Main Event for the script and for our production lined up exactly. Once Macbeth is murdered it becomes clear that Malcolm is going to be the new king and he is going to work to restore everything Macbeth has destroyed.

VI. Actor Journal

01/07/2019
- Why have I left Duncan?
- How long have we been fighting?
- I’ve been a bodyguard to Malcom the whole time. Maybe I watched him grow up since he was a little kid.
- We’ve been fighting this battle for months.
- Parentheticals need more or less influence.
- Act 1, Sc. 2 – Head wound is the most important thing.

01/08/2019
- Act 2, Sc. 3 – The suspicion hits sooner than I think it should. There’s a fucking murderer in this building with me!
- Why is it taking so long for someone to answer the door? Something has to be wrong.
- Remember that the ride here has been treacherous.
- Duncan is someone like Mr. Cork or Jim Bell
- During the meeting after Duncan’s body was found Macbeth just sat in the corner and didn’t say anything. He was acting very strange, unlike himself. Something’s up.

01/10/2019
- Act 2, Sc. 4 – Fueling thought: You have to trust me.
- Ross is the next person closest to me after my wife and children.

01/14/2019
- Act 4, Sc. 3 – How much do I know about what Macbeth has been doing in Scotland?
- What has Macbeth been doing in Scotland that we know he is a tyrant?
- Before I left I wasn’t the nicest to my wife. I was very distant and didn’t tell her why I was leaving. I feel like we didn’t part on the best of terms.
- Killing Macbeth is the only thing that will absolve me from my mistake of leaving my family behind.

01/17/2019

- Macbeth is trying to snuff people out. He has made people who stand in his way disappear.
- Macbeth is Trump
- What if it was a mistake to leave my family? If anything were to happen to them I don’t know what I would do.
- Fueling thought: I need your help!

VII. One-Person-Show

In the last year of this program I was required to take a “One-Person-Show” class. In this class I would instructed to take the skills that I had learned as an actor and utilize them for the purpose of creating a solo piece, meant to be written, directed, and performed by myself. Being openly gay, I decided to write about the gay experience through the lens of a closeted teenage boy who was struggling with is sexual orientation.

The protagonist, Austin, reveals stories about his experiences and goes through a series of uncomfortable interactions until he is outing by one of his best friends. The pressure of being exposed becomes too much for him, and he decides to take his own life. He documents all of this in a diary that becomes the vehicle through which this story is told.

I’ve included this piece in my thesis because it is relevant to the topic of discussion, “What it means to be a man.” As a gay man in this country it can sometimes feel like you are less of a man than everyone else because you do not follow the strict guidelines of masculinity that have been prescribed by society. This can lead to ridicule, judgement, and hate from the people who do follow those guidelines. This can be very hard to cope with for some people and can often lead to personal injury and even suicide, as is the case for the protagonist in my piece.
However, as I have previously stated, being a man is about the choices you make, not about who you love or who you are attracted to. As long as your heart is in the right place and you chose to be the best human being you can be, that makes you more of a man than anything else. Unfortunately, this is not a lesson that Austin was able to learn in his lifetime. I have included a copy of the script below for reference.

VIII. One-Person-Show Script

Dear Diary

By Justin Mackey

Lighting: The play essentially takes place in two worlds; the world of the diary and everything outside of that. To represent that I’m hoping for distinctly different looks for each of these worlds. The diary world should feel cozy/personal if that makes any sense. A place that Austin can feel comfortable in. Then everything outside of that should be the exact opposite. I’m thinking the lighting shifts between diary entries will be smoother and take some time whereas that shifts within the scenes will be more abrupt.

SQA: Preshow. “She Keeps Me Warm”

SQB: Preshow out.

LQ1 Lights up on a bedroom in the middle of the stage

(The stage is set with just a bed upstage center. Messy and unmade. Next to the bed sits a nightstand. There can be random items of teenage paraphernalia scattered around the bed, i.e. clothes, books, video games. Austin enters carrying a backpack. He tosses the bag down next to the bed and sits cross-legged at the edge of the bed. He takes in the audience and takes a deep breath.)

AUSTIN

Dear Diary,

I’ve been having these weird feelings lately. There’s this new kid at my school, Jason Morris. He’s in my grad even though he’s 14, and every time I’m around him my chest gets really warm and I feel like I’m going to throw up, but I’m also really excited and I say really stupid things like, “Oh, you’re from Kansas? THERE’S NO PLACE LIKE HOME!” And then the other day I was watching the movie Watchmen and I couldn’t stop staring at the big naked blue man. When I go to school, or church, or to the mall I look at different guys and I get excited again… I think I might be gay.
AUSTIN
Dear Diary,

Do you think that all gay people go to Hell? I went grocery shopping with my mom today and there was this group of people out in front of the store, and they were holding signs that said things like, “GOD HATES FAGS” and “HOMOSEXUALITY IS A SIN.” I wanted to ask my mom about it, but I was afraid she was going to suspect something, and I don’t know how convincingly I could have lied to her in that moment, So I just said.

AUSTIN
Mom, why are those people holding those signs?

MOM
Oh…um. Well, Austin, do you know what a gay person is?

AUSTIN
Yeah…sort of.

MOM
Well, those people think that people who are gay are…committing a sin. That’s why God made Adam and Eve. A boy and a girl.

AUSTIN
Do you believe that?

MOM
Well, I personally don’t have anything against people who are gay. A very nice man who I work with is gay, but I do agree that it’s not something that God wants. I think people who choose to be gay are willingly turning their back on God.

AUSTIN
So, now I’m scared that I’m going to Hell for being gay. That can’t be true, right? How can I go to Hell for something that I can’t control? I mean I didn’t choose to be this way. Actually, I’ve wished so many times that I could just be like everyone else, so that I wouldn’t have to feel ashamed anymore.

AUSTIN
(Time shifts to the date of another journal entry.)
AUSTIN
Dear Diary,
Today was the fucking best! Jason and I were hanging out at the arcade and we won enough tickets to get a slingshot, so we rode our bikes down to the creek next to the museum and we took turns seeing how many frogs we could shoot with it. I beat him by three frogs and he said I was cheating, so I was like,
LQ6: Lights change to the real world.
AUSTIN
How can you cheat at shooting frogs with a slingshot?
JASON
YOU get too close to them.
AUSTIN
It’s called strategy.
JASON
I’ll show you a strategy,
LQ7: Lights change back to the diary world.
AUSTIN
and he tackled me and we started wrestling until he pinned me down and gave me a titty twister. I know, I should have really pissed, but it was honestly one of the best moments of my life. Then we rode our bikes back to his house and played video games for like three hours… I wanted to tell him how I felt so bad, but I know that he’ll freak out, and I don’t want him to hate me for the rest of my life.
LQ8: Lights fade on the diary world and come up on another part of the stage.
(Time shifts to the date of another journal entry)
AUSTIN
Dear Diary,
I don’t know why this is happening to me. I try to be a good person. I always help people when they need it. I get good grades. I do extracurricular activities, and I’m nice to everyone! So why do I have to be gay? It’s so hard trying to be like everyone else. Trying to be a man. A man who has sex with girls and likes fixing cars and going hunting. I don’t like any of those things! I don’t even like driving my car! Sometimes it gets so bad that I just want to scream. I want to scream so loud and so long that it makes people feel the way I’m feeling. It’s like there are razor sharp, burning hot knives stabbing into my heart and nothing will make it go away. The worst part is knowing that I can’t tell anybody. I mean, there’s only one other gay kid at my entire school and everybody treats him like shit. And, I don’t even know what my parents would say. I think they would be really disappointed in me, and it would kill me if I ever let them down. I’m just so sick of living two different lives. The one that everyone else knows me in and the one I’m living on the inside.

LQ9: Lights change to real world. (Maybe just a wash of the entire stage?)

(Austin’s mom enters. We are taken out of the diary world. Austin’s entire mood shifts.)

Oh, hey mom. No, I’m just doing some homework. Yeah, chicken curry sounds great! My day was good. I got an A on my English test. Yeah, I know. You were right. Yeah, I’ll be down in a little bit. Love you too.

LQ10: Lights shift back to the same diary world.

(Scene shifts back into the diary world.)

I know there are other people out there like me who aren’t afraid to be who they really are, but I just don’t know if I’m as strong as they are. I wish more than anything to be brave enough to stop hiding. I just don’t know what I would do if my family didn’t love me anymore.

LQ11: Lights fade on diary world and up on another part of the stage.

(Scene shifts to the date of another journal entry.)

(Time shifts to another journal entry)

AUSTIN

Dear Diary,

Today we were going over poems in my English class, and my teacher assigned us to write a poem about ourselves. He called it a “Where You’re From” poem. We got to read some examples in class, and they were all really fucking good, so I got nervous and super self-conscious about what I was going to write. But then he showed us this poem that was written by a seven year old, and like obviously it wasn’t like the most elegant thing in the world, but it was still so powerful because the kid was so honest. I mean, what did she have to lie about? She was seven. So I sat down and started writing this poem:

LQ12???: It’s possible there is another lighting cue here. I may want to isolate him as much as possible.

(Austin takes a piece of paper from his pocket and starts to read.)

Where I’m From

I’m from an empty space with no walls

Where there’s nothing to see or hear but the sounds of your own heart beating.
And it feels like my heart is beating faster and louder than everyone elses.
I’m from,
“How are you?”
“Oh, I’m good.”
Even though I’m not good, and what I really wanted to say was “Help me.”
I’m from a constant state of panic that everything I do might give me away.
Is this shirt too gay?
Did I say that with too much of a lisp?
Was my handshake strong enough?
Do I walk gay? Talk gay? Look gay? Smell gay?
I’m from Alaska.
I’m from Cambodia.
I’m from Gary, Indiana
I’m from anywhere that’s not inside of this body because
It’s the last place that I really want to be.
I’m from,
“I love you mom. I love you dad. But I’m too afraid to tell you who I really am.”
I’m from a wish.
A wish that someday I might know who I am.
LQ13: If cue 12 happens this will bring us out of it.

AUSTIN

I didn’t actually turn this in. I just wrote a stupid poem about my family and how I fell out of a tree when I was nine. I told myself that I will never show this to anyone. I don’t even think it’s that good.

LQ14: Lights fade down on the diary world and up on another part of the stage.

(Austin puts the poem back in his pocket. Time shifts to another journal entry.)

AUSTIN

Dear Diary,
I had to have another one of those extremely awkward and uncomfortable conversations today. My friends were talking about the girls in my class that they thought were hot and they started rating them in order based on their hotness.

LQ15: Real world lighting. Maybe a little scarier?

BOY #1
Yeah…Jessica’s like a 10 in the face, but her tits are so small you can barely see ‘em.

BOY #2
I’d give her a ten in the face if you know what I mean!

(Boy #2 goes to high-five Boy #1. Boy #1 accepts)

BOY#1
Yeah…and then Amy’s got like this really long pinky toe and it kind of freaks me out.

BOY #2
Yeah, but I bet she could do a lot with that pinky finger if you know what I mean!

(BOY #2 goes for another high-five. Boy #1 accepts.)

BOY #1
And then you have Emily who’s smokin’ hot but she gets like this weird morning breath that only stinks after she eats lunch.

BOY #2
I’d let her smell my morning breath if you know what I mean!

(BOY #2 goes for another high-five. This time Boy #1 does not accept.)

BOY #1
What do you think Austin?

AUSTIN
What? Oh…um..I mean who cares about morning breath when she’s got that ass!

BOY #1
Haha..you right. You right.

BOY #2
Yeeeeaaaaahhh!

(Boy #2 goes to high-five Austin. Scene shifts back to the diary)
LQ16: Diary World

AUSTIN

What was I supposed to say? “Actually, you know who I think is really hot? Jason! He’s a solid 10/10 with the perfect butt and personality to go along with it, and he would never judge people based on their breath or their pinky toes. (beat) God, I’d give anything to be able to say that.

LQ17: Diary world shifts to another part of the stage.

(Scene shifts to the date of another journal entry)

Dear Diary,

I did something really fucking stupid today. Jason and I were hanging playing video games like we always do, and I kept shooting him when he wasn’t looking, so he got mad and punched me in the arm, and we started wrestling just like we’ve done a thousand times before, but this time I pinned him down and I was just about to tell him to say uncle, but for some reason I leaned down and I kissed him. I fucking kissed him. And for a second I thought he was going to kiss me back, but then he pushed me off of him.

LQ18: Reality world.

(Scene shifts to earlier that day)

JASON

What the fuck man!

AUSTIN

Yeah what the fuck! That was fucking weird.

JASON

You kissed me.

AUSTIN

What? No! You kissed me!

JASON

Dude, WHAT THE FUCK.

AUSTIN

I….

JASON

Dude, are you gay?
AUSTIN
No…I’m not..I’m

JASON
Bro, I’m not gay.

AUSTIN
No I know. I don’t know what…

JASON
Dude, you have to tell me right now. Are you a fucking faggot?

AUSTIN
I don’t…uh…I have to go.

LQ19: Diary World.

(Scene shifts back to the diary world.)

AUSTIN
I’ve texted him three times since then.

(Austin pulls out his phone and texts)

“Omg. I’m so sorry. I don’t know what happened. That was really gross”.

(He waits.)

“I swear I’m not gay.”

(Waits again.)

“Do you still want my answers to Van Dyke’s homework?”

(Austin looks out. Scene shifts to the date of another journal entry.)

LQ20: Diary World shifts to another part of the stage.

AUSTIN
Dear Diary,

Jason hasn’t talked to me all week. Every time I see him in the hallway he just turns and walks in the other direction. He’s been hanging out with Derek Miller who’s such an asshole. I don’t know what to do. He’s my best friend in the whole world. I can’t lose him.

(Scene shifts to the date of another journal entry.)

LQ21: Diary world shifts.
AUSTIN

Dear Diary,

I feel like I’ve fallen into an endless black hole and I just keep on falling and there’s nothing to grab onto. Whenever someone talks to me it’s like I’m hearing them through a wall from in the next room.

LQ22: Real World

(Mom enters)

Hey, mom. No, I’m just working on some homework. Um…no that’s okay. I’m not really that hungry. Yeah, yeah I’m fine. I think I just have a little stomach bug. No I don’t need to see a doctor, I think I’m just going to go to bed early. Yeah, really, I’m…I’m fine. I love you too.

LQ23: Diary world.

I’m not fine. I’m constantly on edge thinking that everyone knows my secret. My heart hurts so much it feels like I’ll never be happy again.

LQ24: Diary world shifts.

AUSTIN

Dear Diary,

Today was the fucking worst! In A.P. Chemistry Mr. Schaeffer was writing an equation on the board and he dropped his marker on the ground, so he bent down to pick it up and I couldn’t help myself. I was sitting like three feet away from him, and I wasn’t even thinking about it. So I was staring and Derek Miller caught me staring at Mr. Schaeffer’s butt and whispered fag under his breath and everyone started laughing. Then for the rest of the day everyone kept calling me fairy and homo and asking me if I sucked Mr. Schaeffer’s dick to get an A in the class. I spent 6th and 7th period hiding in the 3rd floor bathroom. (beat) I can’t go back there again.

SQC: V.O.

LQ25: Big transition

(The scene starts to transition into something completely different. Throughout, Austin’s voice is heard through V.O.)

AUSTIN (V.O)

Dear Diary, why can’t I just be like everyone else?
Dear Diary, maybe someday I’ll change.
Dear Diary, does that fact that I have a diary make me gay?
Dear Diary, I feel so alone.
Dear Diary, my grandma asked me today why I don’t have a girlfriend. I just shrugged and said “I don’t know.”

Dear Diary, what if I want to have kids some day?

Dear Diary, What if I’m bisexual? I had a sex dream about Anne Hathaway once.

Dear Diary, you’re the only one I can talk to.

Dear Diary, this will be my last entry.

(The scene is now fully transformed into what looks like a funeral. Austin’s bed has become his casket, on top of which sits a single rose and a recent picture of Austin. Austin’s mother stands next to the casket. She addresses the audience.

MOM

Good evening everyone. I’d like to thank you all for coming out tonight. I know Austin would have been so happy to see all of you here. He had such a big heart, and I think everyone who knew him would say the same thing. He was the nicest person you could ever meet. What I didn’t know was how much pain he was in. How scared and ashamed he felt all the time. Because he was always so positive. Even if I asked if something was wrong I’m sure he wouldn’t tell me. Um…I didn’t know this either, but Austin kept a diary. He wrote in it every day…Um…I’d like to read a little of something that he wrote.

I’m from a wish.

A wish that someday I might know who I am.

And I’ll be able to go out into the world and say This is me.

I’m from an alien planet.

Where I’m not scared to love who I want to love

And where I’m not judged for it.

I’m from the feeling of a weight lifted off my chest

So heavy it feels like I’ve morphed into a completely different person.

And now I’m lighter than air.

I’m from a place where people see me.

The real me.

And they love me.

For who I really am.
MOM

I’m so sorry Austin. I didn’t know. I wish you would have told me. I just…didn’t know. (Mom takes a second to compose herself.) Austin was a good kid. Someone that people should look up to. He didn’t deserve this. No one does. That’s why I’m organizing a support group for anyone who needs someone to talk to. All are welcome. Thank you.

Dear Theatre Friends,

Welcome to our first production of the Spring 2019 semester! After three successful productions, Clybourne Park, She Kills Monsters, and Tape Girls, we are proud to present our fourth installment of the 2018-19 season: William Shakespeare’s thrilling drama, Macbeth. This classic play, rich with themes relating to human fate, ambition, guilt and paranoia, has been presented by professional theatre companies as well as universities for hundreds of years and continues to challenge directors, designers, and actors in ways that produce fresh and exciting interpretations of this compelling story.

Macbeth is being directed by the Department of Theatre’s Head of Undergraduate Studies and acting instructor, Steven Marzolf. You may be familiar with Steven as he is also an active actor and director, having appeared in television, film, and live theatre with organizations such as Tiller Theatre, The Classical Edge Theatre, and TheatreSquared. Steven has a passion and love for the stories and lyrical language of Shakespearean plays and we are pleased to share with you his intriguing interpretation of this historic and revered play.

Having spent the past 27 years at the U of A, I have seen hundreds of eager, talented, and hardworking students grow into collaborative, cutting edge, professional theatre artists. I’ve watched them graduate and go on to have amazing careers working at theatres all over the world, and I am proud to say they are our alumni. And you, our audiences should be proud of their accomplishments as well. Without your support and encouragement, their journey may have taken a different path.

Live theatre establishes an unspoken, unique, and supportive relationship between performers and patrons, one that is vital to the development of any theatre artist. I thank you all for choosing the Department of Theatre for your live theatre experiences.

Now sit back and enjoy this exciting performance of Macbeth!

Getting to Know... Eric Armstrong

Who is Eric Armstrong?
A sentient germ piloting a human suit. Hopefully no one notices...

When did you get interested in lighting design?
I really didn’t get into lighting design until my second to last year of undergrad. After taking the required light design class and discovering I really enjoyed it, I translated every actor’s costume into lighting design with Shawn Irish because you never know what could happen.

What exactly does a lighting designer do?
The lighting designer creates lighting to enhance the story telling of the show. In simplest terms, I make sure you can see the actors, but also help set mood and location in concert with the scenic designer.

Were there any particular challenges?
Other than the tight schedule which is just a reality of doing theatre, the real challenge for Macbeth came from the amazing equipment we have here at the global campus black box theater. All our lights have the ability to change to any color I want as well as most of other cool tricks, so had to really make sure I had a clear idea about what I wanted the show to look like so I didn’t get overwhelmed with making choices.

Do you have any advice for students wanting to pursue a degree in design?
The sooner you can take classes and get involved the better, every show or class is an opportunity to learn and experience. Also, designers at all levels from college to Broadway love talking about their designs so never be afraid to ask questions when you meet someone.

Director's Notes
Macbeth. The name alone elicits fear and wonder. It’s a name we aren’t supposed to say because it can conjure up the deeps of darkness. So the question is, why do Macbeth? What can we learn from a play written over 400 years ago about a man who sells his way to the top and in the process destroys everything that had meaning to him?

Those were the questions I struggled with when deciding to direct the play. But as I looked deeper, it’s a story that’s quite relatable. Macbeth is a noble person who gives into his appetites. And who at one time or another hasn’t done that? Who looking back over their life, cannot perceive some moral catastrophe that they narrowly escaped, or didn’t escape? And who hasn’t walked up to the edge of the abyss (could be a choice, a decision, an event) looked squarely into it and then decided to not dive in? Or did dive in?

We, as human beings, are all capable of being kind, loving, giving, selfless and caring. We are also capable of greed, envy, hate, selfishness and lack of remorse. Macbeth is a view into the darker side of human nature. And as theatre artists, it is our responsibility to shine lights on all aspects of humanity to bridge the gap and bring people together. That means looking at the good, the bad and the ugly. And it isn’t easy to look at the bad and the ugly and at times it isn’t fun, but we must. Because when we understand the darkness, we can merge it with the light and move forward transformed and whole as human beings. God knows if there was ever a time in human history for that, bridge to be gapped, it is now.

Macbeth Program. Pages 13 & 4.
Who is Sam Murphey?
When asked where my hometown is, I simply say Fayetteville, AR. However, it’s much more complicated than that. My father was in the military so with that, we would move from place to place every 1-2 years. On top of that, I was born with Apert Syndrome. I would give the medical definition, although I don’t want to put you to sleep. It basically causes me to have four fingers on each hand with limited mobility, and a slightly deformed face. As of right now, I’ve had 21 surgeries, but who’s counting.

When did you first get interested in stage management?
Growing up, I was a choir boy singing my heart out. However, when my family and I moved to Fayetteville, I took a different path in High School. I joined the Theatre Dept. and the first play I was part of, they said I was Stage Manager. At first, I thought it was a low-level job since I was just starting out, but boy was I wrong. I ended up loving it, and that’s why I am pursuing it.

What made you decide to pursue a degree in Theatre?
I actually met Michael Atkins when in High School. He was helping to paint a set for a production that I was Stage Manager of and he convinced me to continue on with my passion in college, since I was good at it.

What is your favorite part about stage managing? If you could tell the audience one thing about stage managing, what would it be?
My favorite part about stage managing is the organization and the responsibility you have. You are the glue that holds everything together, from costume fittings to managing props, to helping actors with lines, and to keeping track of your crew. Stage Management is tough, I’m not going to lie. It’s like a schooling of being in front while taking blocking notes, keeping track of all props, answering questions, fixing issues and checking in with designers. By the way, a break was 5 minutes ago. Did you tell the director?

Do you have any advice for students wanting to pursue a degree in Theatre?
My advice is to never give up and keep pursuing what you love. It’s going to be a tough road ahead, but die when I read. Just think, if someone with a physical disability can do it, you have no reason to say you can’t.
